How does GM look in the New Work era?

We've given a lot of thought to this topic. In fact, we were ready to share our findings when protests brought Paris to a standstill back in March this year.

As a result, we gained a new perspective of international and cross-border work. Then we rescheduled the event for July 6th. There are still a few spaces available, so please join us if you can.

London - 8th of June - the Design Museum

If you can't make Paris in July, we're also meeting at London's Design Museum on the 8th of June.

We've lined up some fascinating speakers, including Minako Morito-Jaeger, from the University of Sussex Business School. Minako, a senior research fellow in international trade, will outline some of the New Work challenges for international business and global trade policy.

Alongside Minako, we have speakers from across the industry to talk about fluctuating trends, increasingly complex compliance and emerging GM solutions created with design thinking.

Later, we'll take a guided tour of the Ai Wei Wei exhibition - Making Sense, before enjoying some down time, followed by something to eat.

If you're a RES Forum member and would like to join us at London's Design Museum on the 8th of June...

What is New Work?

A breakaway from the pre-covid approach to international and cross-border work.

New Work is constantly changing.

It's a breakaway from the pre-covid approach to international and cross-border work. And it's reshaping how international business is done.

It's employee-centric, technology-led and future-thinking. It's agile. It's international. It's remote and hybrid and office based. And it's sustainable - potentially.

Whatever it is, New Work affects businesses all around the world. So, businesses all around the world need to consider it, and how it will affect them.
